EN 17419-1:2020 (E)

Introduction

Insurance is a very document-centric business. The number of documents issued is extremely high with an average of at least one document yearly per insurance contract. Any strategy to establish a European Single Market for insurance products requires as a mandatory prerequisite the automated transfer of electronic documents for cross-border processes in the European insurance industry. The metadata are supporting the automated processing and archiving of documents at the receiver of the document, which leads to a straight through processing. Low expectation for national or market specific requirements will facilitate the development and acceptance of a European standard. Saved costs for document printing at the producer, saved costs for the transportation of physical documents and the avoidance of manual processing at the receiver due to automated processing are strong arguments for a digital transfer of documents. The reduced time for the document transfer supports faster processes for an increased satisfaction of insurance clients.

1 Scope

This document defines the process and the structure of the transfer of electronic documents, and facilitates the transfer of electronic documents between stakeholders in the insurance industry.
